Fender twin reverb silverface grill cloth

Hi all, Just wondering if anyone knows how to take he grille off a silverface twin reverb? is it like the bassman cabs where it is attached with velcro or is it nailed in? just want to straighten the grille thats all. Thanks! If it needs straightening, the MDF grill frame might be cracked. If so, I would keep it, along with the original grill cloth, for safekeeping. Then cut a new grill frame out of half-inch plywood and stretch and staple Reprro Grill cloth. Reactions: Musicman1972 A word of caution: The frame is made of particle board and it gets fragile with age. When you try to pry it loose it may very well crack or crumble, rendering it worse than it was still attached. I would seriously consider whether or not you can live with it as it is now as once you put a flat blade screwdriver to it it may be a whole new problem that needs to be addressed. From my experience this is almost a certainty. I'd count on it and consider myself lucky otherwise. I've actually had similar problems with the silverface mdf/particle board cabs. Once picked up a '73 Twin Reverb by the handle and walked away with the top piece. Reactions: Baxtercat, Musicman1972 and Rossi163 Thanks All, got it off without damaging the MFD frame or grille cloth. It was very dirty so I vacuumed all of the dirt and dust out. Thanks again! Thanks again! PS What is recommended to clean the grille cloth? stain remover? I would use a mild detergent and a soft brush followed up by a quick rinse. Just be careful not to get the frame wet as it will swell up and then crumble. Reactions: Baxtercat Yep, work quickly, shake off the water, dry and reassemble before it gets warped. Once I have these off, I spray 409 or some soap/water mix, brush gently, blast off w/ a hose. You'll see the dirt just rinse away.
